Dear

25X1

We have just received the following word query about the delays in mail. They explained that the mail is received and picked up at the base usually three times a week; however, weather and maintenance headaches of late have not allowed these pick ups and deliveries to be kept on a firm schedule and, consequently, mail has been on a somewhat catch-as-catch-can proposition. They have noted that airmail from the East Coast usually takes four or five days and airmail from the West Coast about a week even during the Christmas rush. First class mail, however, takes longer, many times up to two weeks. They explained that due to customs snarl-up unofficial packages (including airmail) were not received during January but are now being delivered regularly.
